Two Tickets to Freedom: The True Story of Ellen and William Craft, Fugitive Slaves by Florence B. Freedman The true story of fugitive slaves Ellen and William Craft, is based largely on William Craft's narrative, Running a Thousand Miles for Freedom. The story begins on a winter morning in 1848 when Ellen Craft, a light-skinned young slave, disguises herself in men's clothing and walks into a train station in Macon, Georgia, and purchases two tickets; one ticket was for herself and the other for her husband. Ellen posed as a white Southern planter, and her husband, William, as her slave. Thus began their dangerous journey that took them to England and eventually back to Georgia. Let's Put Our Money Together: The Founding of America's First Black Banks

The history of America's earliest African American banks is something that is not widely known. These banks served as an important source of credit while also offering innumerable other benefits to the consumers and communities that they served. The latest volume of the Kansas City Fed's historical book series details the stories and accomplishments of these bankers.

The Economics of Jim Crow

In this lesson, students learn how the laws and practices of Jim Crow crippled many African Americans and led to economic destabilization. Students examine the economics of Jim Crow, how Jim Crow laws sustained Black economic dependency, and why the rise of a Black middle class challenged white supremacy. As a culminating activity, students devise an “Economic Bill of Rights” for African Americans in three eras: 1865, 1895, and 1940.
