Teacher Background

The Homestead Act of 1862 is often considered one of the most important pieces of legislation in the history of the United States. The Homestead Act, enacted during the Civil War in 1862, provided that any adult (21 years or older) citizen, or intended citizen, who had never borne arms against the U.S. government could claim 160 acres of surveyed government land. Claimants were required to “improve” the plot by building a dwelling and cultivating the land. After 5 years on the land, the original filer was entitled to the property, free and clear, except for a small registration fee. Title could also be acquired after only a 6-month residency and trivial improvements, provided the claimant paid the government $1.25 per acre. After the Civil War, Union soldiers could deduct the time they had served from the residency requirements. Settlers from all walks of life including newly arrived immigrants, farmers without land of their own from the East, single women and former slaves came to meet the challenge of “proving up” and keeping this "free land". Eventually 270 million acres, or 10% of the area of the United States was claimed and settled under this act.

Kansas, which had been a sanctuary for runaways during the Civil War, was the closest western state to the Old South that allowed African Americans to homestead in the 1870's. Thousands of African Americans chose to relocate there because they believed it to be free of racial restrictions and violence. As The Topeka Colored Citizen said, "Our advice . . . to the people of the South, Come West, Come to Kansas . . . it is better to starve to death in Kansas than be shot and killed in the South."

One of the most famous black settlements in Kansas is the town of Nicodemus. Named for a legendary African prince who had been sold into slavery and eventually purchased his own freedom, Nicodemus was founded in 1877 by a white developer and a group of black homesteaders from Lexington, Kentucky. By 1879 the town had a population of 600 people.

Nicodemus became an important symbol of self-governance and economic success for African Americans. One of the most successful citizens of Nicodemus was Anderson Boles, who arrived in Nicodemus without any resources and became the owner of a local hotel, 75 acres of land, and 19 hogs. Anticipating the construction of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, the town boomed. In 1879 there were twenty-five houses and both a Baptist and a Methodist Church. In addition two drugstores, three grocery stores, a bank, a hotel, and two newspapers were established.

In the 1880s, Nicodemus underwent a steady decline. 40 percent of the wheat crop was destroyed by the winter blizzards of 1885. Two years later, the Missouri Pacific Railroad bypassed the town and Nicodemus's fate was sealed. After 1888, local boosters ceased trying to attract new settlers, and prominent citizens left the area.

The history of Nicodemus is re-visited every year at "Homecoming," which is celebrated during the first week of August. At that celebration, descendants of Nicodemus residents come from all over the United States to participate in the reunion. Designated a National Historic Landmark in 1975, Nicodemus stands as the only entirely African American community in Kansas.

Motivation

Display Resource 1: All Colored People That Want to Go to Kansas. Ask:

- When did this advertisement appear?
- In what town and state did it appear?
- To whom was this advertisement geared?
- What was being advertised?

Development

1. Explain to students that in the late 1800's the Homestead Act gave people the opportunity to acquire free land. The act stated that anyone over the age of 21 could claim and settle on 160 acres of land on the Plains for free if they lived and worked on it for 5 years. Kansas was an area where that free land was located.
2. Have a student locate Kentucky on a United States map. Next have them locate Kansas. Ask:
 - Why do you think people took advantage of this opportunity?
 - What types of transportation might have the people used to get the free land?
3. Explain to students that after the Civil War, the Homestead Act was important for African Americans because it offered them an opportunity for them to own their own land. The price of farmland in the South was often too expensive for newly freed slaves to buy. In addition, African Americans continued to receive unfair treatment. Moving to the West gave them hope for the future. This advertisement and others like it encouraged African Americans to move to Kansas. The African Americans who chose to move West were known as Exodusters.
4. Tell students that many African American homesteaders thought one town in Kansas, Nicodemus, sounded like a good place to settle. The story Wagon Wheels is based on the true story of an African American family from Kentucky who moved to Nicodemus.
5. Distribute Resource 2: Wagon Wheels: An Artful Reflection. Explain to students that after reading Wagon Wheels, they will fill in this graphic organizer. As they read, they should be thinking of pictures to draw that illustrate the beginning of the story, the middle of the story, and the end of the story.
6. After students have finished the book, help them complete Resource 2, reminding them to write a descriptive sentence for each of their illustrations. Have volunteers share their work.

7. Divide students into groups. Distribute one copy of Resource 3: Productive Resources to each group. Review natural, capital, and human resources with students. (See Teacher Background.) Have them write the definition of each type of resource in the second row of the chart. Distribute copies of Resource 4a-d among the groups. Have students cut out the pictures and place them in the appropriate boxes on Resource 3: Productive Resources. Have student groups report out to the class.
8. Tell students that productive resources were also used to build homes. Ask students to revisit the section of Wagon Wheels (pages 13-15) that deals with the building of a dugout. Tell them that it took a combination of natural, capital, and human resources to build a dugout. Distribute Resource 5: Production Chart. Have students complete the activity. Check for understanding.

Assessment

Have students respond to the following prompt:

The Reginald F. Lewis Museum of Maryland African American History and Culture is sponsoring an exhibit on the African Americans who moved West after the Civil War (Exodusters). They have asked your class to write a short article about the Exodusters for elementary school children. Your article should include the following:

- At least 2 reasons why African Americans chose to move West
- How the settlers used natural, human, and capital resources to build their homes

Closure

Have student volunteers share their articles with the class.

Building a Dugout

The dugout was a room dug in the side of a hill. A few rails or posts were used to make the frame and possibly a window. The front wall was made of grass that was cut into squares. A roof sloping back onto the hill was made with poles covered with brush and prairie grass thick enough to hold dirt. Another layer of dirt was placed over the grass.

Directions:

1. Use what you learned from the story and the information above to draw a picture of the resources needed to build a dugout.
2. Write a sentence that explains the production process.
